

IC-LAB-002: Does the answer to question 1 depend on whether, at the time the new customer comes on line, the system is in a reliability constraint versus largely indicating sufficient reliability?

Response from Mr. Raphals:

Assuming that upgrade costs are measured against baseline investments that are designed to provide an adequate level of reliability, there is no need to include reliability benefits in the network addition policy, regardless of the timing of the addition.